

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An optical switching system that switches the output port of an optical signal as indicated by address information (a label) that is contained in optical data packets constituting the 5 optical signal. The optical switching system reads the address information by detecting the electric power level of a label signal that has been subjected to an optical angular modulation, passed through an optical filter and been subjected to an optical detection.